Sex, drugs, smokes & booze: What's driving teen trends?

Jude Ball

Department of Public Health, University of Otago, Wellington

Over the past 20 years there has been a seismic shift in adolescent risk behaviour in New Zealand and internationally. This seminar examines long-term trends in adolescent smoking, drinking, marijuana use and sexual behaviour, and explores possible explanations for these trends.

Jude Ball is a final-year PhD candidate in the Department of Public Health. She has a background in critical psychology and health promotion, and has worked as a public health researcher for over 10 years.

Friday 24 August 2018 12.30 to 1.15
